A Carrier with Versatility and Comfort

A wrap is basically a long piece of material that can be manipulated around the wearer and baby into a variety of positions. A wrap can be made out a variety of materials, from organic german woven cotton to an old bed sheet.

There are two basic types of wraps: woven and stretchy. Stretchy wraps are the ultimate in cuddly and soft. They are great for snugly positions and are easy to use. Woven wraps are stronger and more supportive. They can hold a toddler for hours in the ultimate comfort.

Wearing a wrap, you can carry your baby however your imagination sees fit. Once you get some practice with your wrap, it becomes second nature. There are some basic positions that are both comfortable and useful. Wear your baby on your front or your back, in a tummy-to-tummy position or cradle-hold, the wrap can do whatever you need it to do.

Wrapss are a great carrier for versatility. With a wrap, you only need one carrier to take you wherever you want to go.

Benefits of Wrap:

- comfort of a two-shoulder carrier
- very versatile--many positions, front, back or hip
- great for nursing
- some poppable carries for in and out

Drawbacks to a Wrap:

- some learning curve
- long piece of cloth can be bulky or hard to store
